

Q: I.e. 'Herbert Simon's 'Administrative Behaviour' presents a synthesis of classical and behavioural approaches to the study of public administration'. Explain.

→ Simon marks a transition between classical and behavioural concepts of public administration.

The text contains elements of both and forms the synthesis.

Simon's effort focussed on 'decision making' within administrative system. For a more realistic decision making and identification of decisional premises, Simon integrated the two approaches, thus, fairly marking a synthesis.
